WALKING IN TWO WORLDS: WHAT WORKS AND WHY!

.... creating new forms of relationships between those serving and those served

OUR GOAL

To provide opportunities for individuals to transcend the world of institutions, cultural differences, misunderstandings and dependency to a world of families, communities, common values, interdependency and the pursuit of wisdom.

OUR OBJECTIVES

- To learn what works and why through the eyes and ears of those served.
- To nurture people and the work they do in community building.
- To return to cultural roots to better understand the contemporary worldview.
- To understand the dynamics of interdependent and culturally coherent relationships between clients and service providers.
- To provide policymakers, service providers, and institutional leaders with increased knowledge and understanding of the formal and informal support systems in families and communities.

REASONS TO ATTEND

- We are in desperate times when all must share in the responsibilities of a safe and caring society for our children and future generations.
- We must listen to each other with our minds and hearts.
- We must gain clarity of what is and is not working.
- We must pool all of our resources as the division between the “haves” and “have-nots” increases.
- We must not fear the truth, but must confidently embrace it.

WHO SHOULD ATTEND

For citizens who know change is a necessity and are tired of old solutions, especially service providers, educators, policymakers and community leaders who want to get involved and make a difference in the lives of children and families.

WORLDS APART

Many of us have reached out and provided numerous services to the communities we love. Yet, how often do we take the time to listen to the members of our communities about what they feel have been helpful and useful to them? When providing services, do we take into account the role of culture?

Community members who have received services will share their experiences about what works within their culture while living in today's society.
